Deflecting away from the actual issues I raised—judicial misconduct, retaliation, and acts of intimidation to include vandalism of my home—does not resolve anything. It only reinforces the perception that serious concerns involving powerful institutions and federal contractors are being ignored.

Congressman Clyburn,

Your office's response to my recent inquiry was unacceptable.

I asked a very specific question regarding the email I received from the Department of Defense stating that a fax referencing me had been received from Congressman Clyburn's office. Instead of addressing that issue, your staff redirected the conversation to a whistleblower complaint from more than two years ago. That was not the subject of my inquiry.

At the time this communication was allegedly sent, your office did not have a signed privacy release form from me. I had not provided one. Despite that fact, a document referencing me was apparently transmitted from your office to the Department of Defense.

Your staff's response avoided the question entirely and attempted to shift the discussion to unrelated matters. That kind of deflection only raises more serious concerns about what actually occurred.

Your office is supposed to represent the people of South Carolina. Instead, it appears more interested in protecting powerful corporations and government agencies while ignoring the concerns of the constituents you were elected to represent.

If this is how your office intends to handle legitimate concerns brought forward by the people in your district, then you are part of the problem. South Carolina deserves leadership that is willing to confront corruption and misconduct rather than ignore it.

I will take this into consideration when it's time for you to be reelected.
